Brief summary of major changes:

In Australia there have been regional lockdowns, and interstate travel bans remain in place. Following an increase in cases across metropolitan Melbourne and Mitchell Shire, in the state of Victoria, a strict lockdown with stay at home requirements was reimposed on 8 July. The state of New South Wales has seen a rise in cases, but has not yet reimposed lockdown measures. Hong Kong has seen a rise in the community transmission of cases, and all primary and secondary schools began their summer break early on 13 July. In Singapore cases have risen again. These have been contact traced, and the locations and times of places they visited shared on the Ministry of Health website. South Korea has seen a rise in imported cases in the last week. In response, officials now require a negative test certificate for arrivals from Bangladesh, Pakistan, Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan as of 13 July. Cases have also risen again in Japan in the last two weeks. The Tokyo Metropolitan Government raised their alert level back to Red on 15 July, urging caution among citizens.

The Philippines permitted non-essential travel, including domestic flights, to resume on 7 July. In Malaysia foreigners are permitted to enter the country to be with a spouse who is ill if they can provide sufficient medical documentation, as of 8 July. New Zealand has 27 cases of COVID-19 as of 15 July, associated with nationals returning to the country. All arrivals remain subject to a mandatory 14 day quarantine in managed isolation facilities.

Timor-Leste has reported no cases of COVID-19 since April, and schools there have resumed teaching. Laos has also reported no new cases since April, and social gatherings, weddings and traditional events are now permitted with social distancing.
